Three teams at the bank, each reported a different number under the name "Active Customers," measuring completely different things: Finance looked at account balances, Product looked at transaction activity, and Credit looked at open loans. This tab reconciles that conflict. Each team's original metric has been renamed to reflect what it actually measures, and the canonical name "Active Customers" is now reserved for the single certified definition used company wide.

Certified ✅

open account plus any activity, deposits, withdrawals, or loan repayments, in the last 90 days. Used everywhere else across the Executive and Credit & Lending dashboards.

Finance

Counts customers with a positive balance in any account. Misses engaged customers who currently hold a zero balance.

Product

counts customers with a transaction in the last 30 days. Misses loan repayment activity and uses a narrower window than the bank standard.

Credit

counts customers with an open loan. Excludes customers who don't currently borrow.
